In addition to applications like Photoshop, Elements comes with the following features. The following sections teach you how to use Elements to edit and create images. For detailed information, we suggest you look at Adobe Photoshop. Fluid Mask The fluid mask is a tool that can produce a photo with no background or any elements apart from the main subject. It can be used for retouching a face or the face on the main subject only. Select the fluid mask tool > right-click > create mask.

Open a new image with the crop tool by pressing Shift and Ctrl and moving the image to your desired area. Select the fluid mask tool again and drag until the mask is complete. Edit the main subject and add more subject elements to the mask. Add the mask to the original image by holding Shift and moving the image where you want the new image to be. Remove the mask by selecting it and pressing Alt and Shift and selecting crop and edit. Fill The fill tool is used to completely add color to the image. Fill can be used to add colors to the background and the main subject. Select the fill tool and move the image. Click on the desired color and drag the desired color down to the bottom of the image. Erase the background by holding Alt and click the white color until the entire background is removed. Add a new background by selecting the add new color, dragging the color down to the desired area. To change the color of the background, select the brush tool and select a color. Select the new color by clicking on the bottom of the color and moving the color to the desired area. Free Transform The free transform tool transforms the entire image without modifying the subject. Select the free transform tool > right-click > transform. Move the transformed image to the desired location and crop the original image. Add a shadow or glow by holding Shift and clicking the shadow color. Change the effect of the shadow by holding Alt and clicking on the shadow color. ### What's New In Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3.1)?

This invention relates generally to the shaping of fibers, and more particularly to the shaping of optical fibers having a single core or multiple cores. In the production of optical fibers from a glass preform, a large number of such fibers are produced in a single or multiple step production process, and are then separated from one another. The single fiber may be round or any other shape desired. When the fibers are collected into a mat, they are usually positioned in a group, often with the axes of their cores either being parallel or substantially parallel. The fibers may, for example, be grouped according to the type of dye that the fibers will contain, or the direction in which the fibers are to be drawn during the optical fiber production process. Although not necessarily limited to this use, fiber optics are used to conduct sound waves through the cores of optical fibers. In the case of an optical fiber being the waveguide for a given optic fiber, the light-carrying core of the optical fiber will direct light beams along the length of the optical fiber. Similarly, in the case of an optical fiber being the waveguide for a given sound conducting medium, the core of the optical fiber will direct sound waves through the optical fiber. In the production of such optical fibers, a protective coating is usually applied, and a single or multiple step process is used to shape the fiber to provide the desired configuration. For example, a single core or multiple cores of optical fiber can be clad with polymer, a desired size and shape is provided for the core(s), and the polymer is cured, usually by heating. As mentioned above, the optical fibers may be positioned in groups, and the fibers are generally substantially parallel to one another. Therefore, the geometry of the fiber cores may be substantially the same as the geometry of the fibers. Alternatively, the geometry of the fiber cores may differ from the geometry of the fibers. The prior art discloses a number of methods for the production of shaped optical fibers and the clad fibers. In U.S. Pat. No. 2,980,990, Bowers discloses a means of producing various waveguides and optical fibres by molding glass rods with liquid gasses. U.S. Pat. No. 4,136,072 to Souders, Jr., et al. is directed to the molding of glass rods to provide multi-hole round fibers. U.S. Pat. No. 3,914,079 to Li, et al. is
